

- I removed the contract module constants section to align my documentation with audience expectations.
- I reorganized the introduction of the documentation and made it more concise, only introducing the overview of the module, its purpose, the main classes, and the reason for the module's implementation.
- I clearly labelled the API and implementation sections and integrated the excess information about each subclass from the introduction into their respective subclass documentation in the API section.
- I reorganized the headers of each subclass to accommodate the documentation of each subclass's `__init__()` method and shifted some information from the original body description of each subclass and their methods that I feel fit more in the newly labelled implementation section.
- Overhauled the explanation of all subclasses and methods in the API section and included all information that I believe should be in the Implementation section.
